What We Do and Why?

Nine23 provide cyber security solutions and services to enable the frontline end-users in today's workplace to use technology, securely.

Today's end-user expects to operate at work in the same way they do at home – consumer simplicity with enterprise security. We passionately believe that you, the customer, and end-user should be at the heart of everything we do and be empowered to use technology as you need, with confidence in the secure protection you expect.

We fully understand and endorse the value and need for cyber security as a business enabling rather than a business constraint. Through our vast experience of working with national and local clients and partners, we have consistently achieved the highest levels of accreditation and assurance from national bodies and organisations to provide confidence that the systems we develop can be used at highly classified levels of cyber security.

Our Story: A Veteran Owned Business

In 2011, after 23 years in the military, former helicopter pilot, Stuart Mckean set up Nine23 in his home office. Having experienced the problem many employees face in using better IT equipment to do their jobs effectively, Stuart felt he could bring new insights to bear on the challenges.

Stuart founded Nine23 with a commitment to more effectively enable end-users, in compliance and regulatory industries, who were often reliant on out-dated IT solutions.

Leading Nine23's focused and skilful team alongside Stuart, former US Army acquisition officer, Ed Jesson, Nine23's Chairman. Ed brings a depth of experience to Nine23, having founded and run multiple technology businesses for the last three decades. He continues to deliver insights to the team to ensure a balanced and stable future.
